About the Theme

Most Americans' knowledge of the War of 1812 extends to only two events, the writing of the Star Spangled Banner and the Battle of New Orleans. The battle constituted the final act of the war between Great Britain and the United States, pitting a mixed American force of Regulars, volunteers, militia, free blacks, Native fighters, Navy sailors, Marines, and local pirates against battle- hardened veteran British troops including sailors, Marines, and two black regiments, the 1st and 5th West India, to become part of American historical legend.

This year, the Kalamazoo Living History Show will examine the Battle of New Orleans and the ongoing planning for its 200th anniversary commemoration. Steve Abolt and Timothy Pickles, noted historians and respectively commanders of American and British recreated forces, will discuss the battle and illuminate plans for its upcoming 200th anniversary commemoration.

Native American Drumming and Dance a Highlight of the Show

Members of the Match-E-Be-Nash-She-Wish Band of Potawatomi Indians, the Bush Native American Drum and Dance tell the story of their People through their outstanding drumming, singing, and dancing. They perform at many pow wows and historical festivals, and are always great favorites wherever they appear. Their music and dance are eloquent representations of a vibrant culture.

Program times will be posted on our website several weeks prior to the show.
